AMUSEMENTS.

Grand-"A Modern Mephisto." Of course the crowd that went to the Grand last night went for the purpose of hearing Helene Mora's masculine "pipes." Mora's voice is built similar to that of May Yohe, the American girl who set London by the ears and ended by marrying Lord Hope. Yohe, however, has only about four notes in the bass clef, and if she could do as much with so little, Mora, who has an octave or more, ought to be able voice has undergone some training. It is unfortunate that the most of her singing voice is neither strong nor thrilling. The only song of her old repertory given last night was "Au Revoir," sung just before the final curtain. "Ben Bolt" has been rendered far better than Mora gave it, and Lay of the Whippoorwill" has very little in it. "Azayma" is a charming ballad, and was sung with all the thrilling power the woman was capable of giving. Mora squelched the encore business in the first act with a speech, in which she said her voice would not stand more work than one song in each act. It is remarkable how weak some voices become after artists have arrived at that point where they can tell the public to whistle for encores. Time was when Mora would stand up and sing a half dozen songs in succession without a kick. There seemed to be an ignorant claque present last night that insisted on starting the applause after Mora's songs. This came in at the wrong time, and became a bore toward the close. If the publd refuse to applaud when it is found that a theater is "stacked" with these conscienceless howlers it would soon put a stop to the practice.

"A Modern Mephisto," the play selected for Mora's staring tour, gives the only Mora an opportunity to practice as an actress. She appears twice in skirts and the rest of the time in bioomers. Her costumes heretofore have been invariably bifurcated. She makes a charming figure in akirts.

skirts. Her movements are all those of one accustomed to male impersonations, and hence the "new woman" is very prettily buriesqued. Mora is somewhat an actress, and the role given her is unnecessarily "fat." Hers is the privilege to come on the stage and foil the villain at the close of each act. The climax is seldom strong, for she has not dropped into the business yet like an "old stager," and she is further handicapped on account of the very excellent people in the cast. Manager Hyde has taken no chances in this venture, and has provided a cast in which it is a real joy to note the absence of poor Head and front in an artistic way is heridan Block, one of the best "villains" He makes the society scoundrel absolutely attractive. Park-Sam Jack's "Bull Fighter." By far the best company Sam Jack ever sent here is the present one at the Park. It drew two immense houses yesterday and delighted them beyond measure. An extravaganza called "The Bull Fighter" forms the main portion of the performance, and it is well filled with specialties, besides being very funny at times. It is not often that anything cleverer is seen in a burman the Salvation Army which closes the first half of the programme. a pretty dancer; Clements and Barnes, black-face artists; Fatima, the sensational dancer; the Beau Brummell swells and other features. Between the first and second acts living pictures are shown. There are twenty-five people in the company, the costumes are beautiful and the music very bright and pretty. "The Bull Fighter" remains to-day and to-morrow only at the Park, and will be followed Thursday by "O'Hooligan's Masquerade."

Empire-Hyde's Comedians.

A better or more evenly balanced variety company than Hyde's Comedians, which opened at the Empire yesterday, would be hard to find. There are several old favorites in the company, including Harris and Walters, who have remodeled their comedy sketch and brightened it considerably; Lester and McAvoy, parody singers; and the dancing Dalys. Little Vinie Daly is a better dancer than she was when here before. Miss Polly Holmes is a clever singer of the Maggie Cline type.

singer of the Maggie Cline type. The Midgleys, including Sager Midgley, whose "silly boy" impersonation is too well known to need further description, are a late addition. The ridiculous sketch given by Johnny and Emma Ray had its usual effect on the audience, the house being in a roar of laughter from the beginning to the end. Miss Fannie Mora, a younger sister of Helene, is a clever contraits singer of new songs and took well, though she was a bit nervous yesterday afternoon, owing, perhaps, to the presence of Miss Helene Mora and proprietor Hyde, of the company, in one of the boxes. In addition, the electric lights burned out just as she made her appearance. The Wilmot addition, the electric lights burned out just as she made her appearance. The Wilmot duo of bicycle riders gave an act remarkable in the number and variety of feats accomplished, including riding on a single wheel, riding with everything removed from the wheel but the pedals, and other difficult acts. The Newsboys' quintet was a novel feature and was well received, the youngsters getting several recalls. A very funny afterpiece, in which Harris and Johnny Ray appear conspicuously, con-cluded the performance. If last night's sale is any indication, the company will do a good business. Every downstairs seat was sold and standing room was fully taxed. The company remains all week, giving daily matinees.

Damrosch at the Auditorium. CHICAGO, Nov. 18 .- The music lovers of Chicago as well as the contingent of wealth and beauty, filled the Auditorium to overflowing this evening to hear "Tristan and Isolde" by the Damrosch Opera Company. Katharina Lohse Klafsky, the great Wagnerian prima donna, created a sensation by her realistic and passionate acting, combined with a beautiful voice, full of freshfristan, made a deep impression, though he has not quite yet recovered from his recent ocean voyage. Herr Demeler Popovici was a very fine Kurvenat. At the end of each act the artists and Mr. Damrosch loudly applauded. Music lovers pronounced to-night's performance one of the finest and most perfect ever given in this city. Max Alvary has almost entirely recovered from his indisposition and will probably sing next Wednesday in "Die

First Performance of "The Witch." CHICAGO, Nov. 18 .- The large audience which assembled at the Schiller Theater to-night to witness the premiere of "The Witch," produced under the direction of Gustave Frohman, insisted that it had discovered a new star. She is Marie Hubert, who appeared in the title role. The development of this role was watched with an interest that at times amounted to awe. "The Witch" is a reproduction of historical events in dramatic form, taken from the official records of old Salem. Mr. Frohman has succeeded in investing the piece with a realistic atmosphere and the production from a scenic standpoint was most ef-

New York's Grand Opera Opening. NEW YORK, Nov. 18.-The season of grand opera began to-night at the Metropolitan Opera House. Plancon, Mile, Bauermeister and other wellknown artists, under the management of Messrs. Abbey, Schoeffel and Grau. There was the usual fashionable crush that marks opening of the Metropolitan season. Mme, saville was repeatedly encored at the close of the second act, and seemed to have won her way to the approval of the audience. The two De Reszkes, as usual, were showered with favors. Emma Calve appears in "Carmen" on Wednesday evening.

SCORED THE LIBRARY Sale of

CISED BY MISS BROWNING.

Extracts from the Papers Referred to by Dr. Milburn in His Ser-

Considerable discussion has followed Dr

Milburn's sermon last Sunday, during the course of which he denounced the public library for disseminating pernicious literature among the youths of the city. As authorities for his statements, Dr. Milburn quoted a paper read by John E. Cleland before the Century Club last spring and year before the Indianapolis Literary Club Part of Mr. Cleland's paper reads: "But paper and print do not necessarily make a good book, nor quantities of books a great library. Into the free circulating library are apt to be dumped all manner of things in the sacred name of literature. I do not mean that much that is positively vicious passes the censors, but much that is negative, trifling, transient, unnatural, weak and weakening goes on the shelf and into our homes. The free library has come to be largely a supplement to the theater, circus and variety show. Probably 80 per cent, of the books taken from the library may be classed as fiction. Probably as large a per cent, of the borrowers never take anything else." In Mr. Hitt's paper he said: "The Indianapolis public library is well managed, is a credit to the city, but like all good things, it has its dangers, and chief among them is the harm it is likely to do by giving young children the unrestricted use of books. There are children without restraint of any kind at home who go to the library and take away story books without let or hindrance. Parents who have the welfare of their children at heart will see to it that too much of this useless literature is not permitted to reach their children, and for such children as have parents who take no interest in their reading, the library should provide a check, a censor, if you please, whose duty it should be to restrict children to a reasonable amount of story-reading and exercise a supervision over the quality that is is-sued to them. It is gratifying to be able to say something of that kind has been at-tempted here. The catalogue shows that there are about twenty-five hundred books with such titles as these, 'The Ragged Dick Series,' the 'Tattered Tom Series,' etc. Twenty-four hundred of the twenty-five might well be destroyed, and the rising generation would be the better for it."

Miss Browning, the librarian, takes exceptions to Dr. Milburn's statements, and denies that 80 per cent. of the books issued by the library are fiction. Miss Browning said: "He says what is the use for our little children, to go to kindergartens, and then, as they grow up, go to a public library and nourish their minds on a meretricious literature that purveys to their lusts, their bad desires and their corrupt passions? What Mr. Milburn says concerning the City Library is untrue. I am here, and I know the character of the books issued to children, and he does not. The lot of literature he denounces is the kind only his kind of people—cultured peo-ple—will read. The other people do not read it because they do not understand it.

Opens with a Very Large Crowd in Attendance-Fine Displays.

The pure food exhibition of the Indiana Retail Merchants' Association opened last evening at Tomlinson Hall with the most flattering prospects. The exhibits were many, although a few firms found it impossible to get their exhibits in place in time for the opening. The crowd was large, so large that it was extremely difficut to get from one part of the hall to the other, and one had to stand in line, like the sufferers around Schlatter, to get a biscuit or cup of coffee. Much interest was shown by the visitors in the different exhibits and the exhibitors were well pleased with the open-

Mayor Taggart officially opened the exhibition, speaking of the great importance of pure food. The crowd was so large and sad to say, there was some little uneasiness upon the part of many to get free samples, that Mr. Taggart could not be heard all through the hall. An orchestra furnished music during the evening An inspection of the hall at 4 o'clock in the afternoon left the impression that it would be impossible for the exhibition to begin as scheduled for at that time everyroad, thus throwing the costs on the plain-tiff. The exhibits are more imerous and greater care has been taken in presenting them. There are many more out-of-town firms represented than formerly. Every firm is doing everything possible to attract attention, but the booths which attracted the most attention last night were the ones where people could get what the boys present called "free eats." There was a great deal of "free eats" distributed, for one could get milk, coffee, chocolate, for one could get milk, coffee, chocolate, cake, crackers, hot cakes, biscuits, pickles and beans and lots of other choice bits. Those in attendance last night were very attentive to the different exhibits. The lecturers had attentive listeners, and the visitors were not only filled with dainty bits of pure food, but much information concerning it. All kinds of food are on exhibition and there are many new and dainty suggestions for housewives. The exhibition will continue during the week and all per sons interested in the food question wil be interested in the show.
